Bugging Out: An Army Memoir (1954 by Tom O'Connell)

Tom O'Connell

Bugging Out: a military Memoir (1954) tells how the writer dropped out of Boston university after 3 years to marry, then volunteered for the military draft to qualify for the G.I. invoice of rights on his go back to college. He used to be no longer ready for the emotional torture that military existence may inflict on his formerly unfastened spirit. Demoralized via merciless superiors in the course of infantry simple training, and lonely for his pregnant wife, he's stuck among responsibility and self-preservation. Reluctantly, he turns to "bugging out" mentally and bodily whereas functioning as an army misfit. With wit and irony, O'Connell makes use of candid discussion with real military language and shiny descriptions to narrate how he handled the army attacks on his autonomous personality. The author's "battle of wits" exhibits one younger guy dealing with the Army's demanding situations to his sanity, and provides scenes reflecting outrage, despair, and hilarity.
