Fragmented France: Two Centuries of Disputed Identity

Jack Ernest Shalom Hayward

For one thousand years France has struggled to impose cohesion upon its assorted components. For many of the time its leaders have sought to outline its identity by way of competition to the 'Anglo-Saxons': first England, then Britain and the USA. The prologue explores France's self-image in contrast with the Anglo-American counter-identity. The first half offers with the incomplete Revolution from 1789 to 1878 whilst the 3rd Republic completed relative stability. After interpreting the diversity of symbolic representatives of Frenchness within the look for democratic legitimacy and nationwide unanimity, the iconic divisions in French society are defined of their ideological, social, religious, territorial and political aspects. Emphasis is given to the position of writers and intellectuals in expressing those cleavages ahead of examining how parliamentary democracy used to be tested via the 3rd Republic. The second half starts off via touching on French political paralysis to the slowness of socio-economic modernization prior to turning to the polarizing function of intellectuals in perpetuating types of Left and right battles over who personified anti-France. The antagonistic personality of French get together politics is then regarded as it fluctuated as much as the current when it comes to the fragmented Left and Right, among the rhetorical progressive and reactionary extremes and the conservative or timidly reformist realities. The colonial and overseas position of France is described, stressing Franco-German and European Union leadership. The protectionist aversion to aggressive worldwide capitalism leads to Fragmented France: Two Centuries of Disputed Identity reluctant adaptation to forces past French control.
