Stories of Red Hanrahan by W.B. Yeats

W.B. Yeats

[...] however the little purple fox murmured, 'O don't pluck at his rein, he's using to the townland that's the world's bane.' whilst their hearts are so excessive That they'd come to blows, They unhook their heavy swords From golden and silver boughs: yet all which are killed in conflict wake up to existence again: it's fortunate that their tale isn't identified between men. For O, the robust farmers that may enable the spade lie, Their hearts will be like a cup that someone had inebriated dry. Michael will unhook his trumpet From a bough overhead, And blow a bit noise while the supper has been spread. Gabriel will come from the water Stories of Red Hanrahan With a fish tail, and talk[...].
