The Merchant's Mark (Gil Cunningham #3)

Pat McIntosh

compliment for the Gil Cunningham series: “Another hearty meal filled with attention-grabbing interval tidbits and a delightful mystery.”—Kirkus experiences “McIntosh artfully interweaves intrigue and historical past during this suspenseful medieval secret tale.”—Booklist The 3rd secret within the Gil Cunningham medieval Scottish series. Gil Cunningham’s pal Augie Morison is a merchant. whilst he opens a barrel despatched The Merchant's Mark (Gil Cunningham #3) from the Low international locations that's purported to include books, he reveals a decapitated head—and a treasure. there's an inquest the next day to come sooner than the Provost at which Morison is accused of the crime and imprisoned. He implores Gil to aid him. the path of the treasure and of the barrel containing it, which they try to stick with as a way to establish the useless man—and his murderer—leads Gil and his betrothed’s father, The Merchant's Mark (Gil Cunningham #3) a French grasp Mason, from the royal courtroom of King James at Stirling, to a cooper’s backyard in Linlithgow, after which to a different corpse, came upon intact, mendacity at the naked slopes of the Pentland hills.

Gil Cunningham is eagerly watching for a cargo of books. but if the barrel that used to be speculated to comprise literature seems to have a human head floating in brine instead, he and his partners develop into enmeshed in yet one more mystery. Another welcome addition to the series! There’s a section extra supernatural stuff (a ghost this time), yet it’s nonetheless attainable in quantity. I like that Gil’s station adjustments among the books. each one ebook is an remoted mystery, of course, however the personality improvement is constant through the series. I’ve relatively loved observing Gil’s courting with Alys develop and alter – which it does in a delightfully reasonable and good method – in addition to their accumulation of partners – first a baby, then a dog. i glance ahead to analyzing the following books within the series!
