The Wheel of Religion

By David Bentley

Imagine that the present world were being built by the most religious nations of Europe. You immediately would imagine that it would be built with steel and iron. Accordingly, the world's religions are being built for a long time by a religious substance for which steel is used. Therefore your effort in building the world would not be made of steel.

The Wheel Of Religion by Dan Hurwitz

Dan Hurwitz

within the Wheel of Religion, the writer offers the validity of our emotional spiritual instincts, yet then is going directly to separate them from our conventional theological trappings. Having made this distinction, to his delight at least, he then indicates another faith in keeping with the idea that we're a species, similar to each other, pressured to undergo nature's principles instead of these we now have comfortably crafted for ourselves. based on the author, these ideas contain a dedication to evolution which, in turn, ends up in the conclusion that we needs to use nature's equipment (known to us because the clinical method) to figure out how that evolution should still continue in each element of our lives.
